

10 Years of Writing from the Top Classroom Management Blog in the World

For the past decade, I have been writing about classroom management on my blog, [blog name]. In that time, I have shared my experiences, research, and tips with teachers all over the world. I have also had the opportunity to work with some of the most amazing educators in the world, and I have learned so much from them.

In this article, I will share some of my most popular posts from the past 10 years. I will also reflect on what I have learned about classroom management over the past decade.

Over the past 10 years, I have written hundreds of posts on classroom management. Some of my most popular posts include:

These posts have been read by millions of teachers around the world, and they have helped me to establish myself as a leading expert on classroom management.

In the past 10 years, I have learned a lot about classroom management. Here are some of the most important things I have learned:

- Classroom management is not about controlling students. It is about creating a positive learning environment where students feel safe, respected, and supported.
- There is no one-size-fits-all approach to classroom management. What works for one teacher may not work for another. It is important to find what works for you and your students.
- Classroom management is an ongoing process. It is not something that you can do once and be done with. It is something that you need to work on every day.
- Relationships are the key to successful classroom management. Students need to feel like they know you and that you care about them. When students feel connected to their teacher, they are more likely to be engaged in learning and to follow your rules.

- Discipline should be fair, consistent, and respectful. Students need to know what the rules are and what the consequences will be if they break the rules. Discipline should be fair and consistent, and it should be administered with respect.

Classroom management is a challenging but rewarding profession. By following the tips in this article, you can create a positive learning environment where your students can thrive.
