History

The Daughters of England was founded in 1834 by a group of women who were concerned about the lack of support and opportunities for women in Victorian England. The society was originally called the United Sisters Friendly Society, but it was renamed the Daughters of England in 1840. The society's early members were working-class women who were employed in a variety of occupations, including domestic service, factory work, and teaching. The society provided its members with a range of benefits, including financial assistance, sickness benefits, and funeral expenses.

The Daughters of England quickly grew in popularity and by the end of the 19th century, it had over 400,000 members. The society was active in a variety of social and political causes, including the campaign for women's suffrage. In 1895, the Daughters of England became one of the founding members of the National Federation of Women's Institutes.

During the First World War, the Daughters of England played a significant role in the war effort. The society's members volunteered for a variety of war-related activities, including nursing, munitions work, and land work.

The society also provided financial assistance to its members who were affected by the war.

After the war, the Daughters of England continued to be active in social and political causes. The society campaigned for a variety of reforms, including the of a minimum wage, the establishment of a national health service, and the provision of free education for all children.

In the 1960s, the Daughters of England underwent a major restructuring. The society's branches were reorganised and the society's focus shifted from social activism to providing support and friendship to its members. The society also began to admit men as members, and in 1979, it changed its name to the Daughters of England and Sons of England.

Aims and Objectives

The aims and objectives of the Daughters of England are:

* To provide support and friendship to its members * To promote the social and economic welfare of its members * To campaign for social and political reforms * To celebrate the history and culture of England
